by Mike Elwood and Jeff Winkler

We have now come to the final season of comparing fishing in Vermont and Oregon. We will close this series of articles with fishing the spring season. Let's start with Mike Elwood's take on fishing in Vermont during the spring months.

Hello everyone, Mike Elwood here. Spring fishing in Vermont is the best time of the year I like to fish. I enjoy fishing the Winooski River in, Colchester. When I start to fish it depends on how high the water level is, how much current there is and how much debris the river is carrying along. I will fish at this time even if there is still snow on the riverbank.

The best time to fish in spring is from the end of March through June. To me April is the best time because of all the fish like Bullhead, Redhorse Suckers, White Nose Suckers, Fallfish, Carp and even Sturgeon, which are a protected fish species in Vermont. I fish a spot on the riverbank, about 200 yards into the woods and away from people. I setup two poles on pole holders. I rig my fishing poles with 12-pound to 20-pound test line with big bell sinker on the bottom. I then place two #3/0 or #4/0 hooks above the sinker about eight inches apart. I bait each hook with one, or two, night crawlers and then I give the crawlers a quick treatment of either Shad, Crawfish or Garlic spray that can be purchased at Dick's Sporting Goods. Believe me, the spray works. I currently still hold the first and second place Vermont state records in the Redhorse Sucker category by using that spray.

Mike Elwood and his first record setting Redhorse Sucker:

Well, if you live in Vermont or are just visiting, try fishing the Winooski River in Colchester. Until then, good luck and, “Fish On.”

Great tips on Springtime fishing in Vermont, Mike. Now let’s look at what Spring fishing is like in Oregon, with Jeff Winkler.

Mike, I agree with you that Spring is a great time to fish. I have to tell you that some of the biggest Smallmouth Bass I have caught in Vermont were right at the spot on the Winooski River where Northgate holds its Kid's Fishing Derby. Spring in my part of Oregon comes a little earlier than in Vermont. It warms up quite a bit earlier unless you live in the Cascade Mountains. However, Spring in Oregon and Vermont share the fact that temperatures can vary quite a bit during the Winter/Spring handshake. One day it can be 80 sunny degrees and the next day it can be 45 degrees and cloudy with rain. This can affect water temperature and if the water cools off some it can turn off the fish.

Although Spring comes earlier out here, fishing techniques are fairly similar between the two states. Early in the Spring I will fish with night crawlers but as the water warms, I'll start switching over to lures but will fish them slow. One of my favorite lures for Spring fishing is a blade bait, like a Silver Buddy or a Steelshad. You fish this lure by casting it out, let it fall to the bottom and then raise your fishing pole upwards, which will bring the lure up from the bottom and then just let the lure sink back to the bottom. Just repeat this process until you have reeled the lure in. The blade bait will both give off a vibration and will also flash in the water which hopefully will attract the fish.

Steelshad Blade Bait:

The key to fishing lures in the Spring is to fish them slowly until the water warms up and the fish become more active. Another method of very slow fishing is called, “dead sticking.” This method is usually done with a plastic worm, lizard, or crawfish. You can even use this method with live bait. Basically, you cast your lure out, let the bait hit bottom and then let it sit for several minutes before slowly twitching the bait and then let it sit for a few several more minutes before repeating the process. Some fishermen will let the bait sit on the bottom for even longer periods of time. Dead sticking does require some patience, but it is a method that pays off when the fish are less active in either cold or hotter water. Mike, I must also agree with you on those sprays. They really do work. I usually use the Bang brand, and I like the Garlic and Shad formulas.

Mike, I must also agree with you on those sprays. They really do work. I usually use the Bang brand, and I like the Garlic and Shad formulas. OK, that wraps up Springtime fishing. Spring is a great time to fish, and you can catch some real big ones. Give it a try. “FISH ON”!
